

DITCH/ IRRIGATION EASEMENTS

Natural and manmade water conveyance structures, control, diversion and measuring structures; and appurtenances thereto (all of the preceding collectively are "irrigation structures" and separately "structure") exist on each Parcel. The conveying language in the following paragraph is intended to be a number of conveyances of easements, one for each improvement on a Parcel ("servient estate") to the other Parcel and/or other land (collectively, "dominant estate") benefited by the improvement.

A perpetual, non-exclusive easement is granted on the servient estate to the vestee of the legal and equitable title of the dominant estate for access to and the operation, maintenance, construction and reconstruction of a structure, each such easement to run with the said dominant and servient estates. Merger and extinguishment shall not occur when the dominant and servient estates are in common ownership unless there is a recorded, unequivocal statement of intent that such occur.

Each easement is limited by the following: a) to a width of fifteen feet on each side of each structure, b) any person exercising rights under an easement shall by that act agree to hold the servient estate harmless from liability and/or damage to the servient estate and any livestock thereon which is reasonably related to such exercise of rights, and c) other than the emergency exercise of rights, the ingress and egress of men, vehicles and machinery on the servient estate shall be subject to the reasonable direction of the owner of the servient estate.
